

Francisco R. Rojas Díaz / Collaborator Member

He was born in the desert solitude of Chile in the mining camp of El Salvador. He grew up in Salamanca, in the valley of the Choapa river, near the mountain range and the sea in the narrowest part of his country. He is a descendant of the Diaguita people. Francisco studied Veterinary Medicine, as well as Environmental Management to contribute to the preservation of ecosystems. He met the Andean Cat in 1998, where he recognized this small cat among the ancient symbols of his land and knew that he should work on its behalf. Currently, he is dedicated to scientific dissemination in the CEAZA, to the cultural management of the Cultural Center of Salamanca Station, and to explaining the aspects of Diaguita Archaeoastronomy.
