

Eliana Flores Figueroa / Collaborator Member

Born in Yura, a small town in the southwest of the Bolivian highlands. Eliana grew up surrounded by Andean vegetation and mountains that awakened her passion for the conservation of Andean felines. In 2016, she supported the process of reintroducing an Andean cat individual named "Jacobo" in the Sajama National Park. This helped her get to know the habitat of the Andean cat well. She is currently developing her undergraduate thesis project in Biology at the Universidad Mayor de San Simón. Her thesis aims to identify the effect of livestock on the diversity of prey available for Andean cats and pampas cats. This is part of the Conservation Program of the Andean cat in Sajama National Park, coordinated by Juan Carlos Huaranca.