In addition to teaching Natural Sciences in secondary schools, since 2000 she has been developing community participation and conservation education activities with children in rural schools in the High Andes and the Patagonian Steppe of Argentina. She spent these years among laughter, whispers, hugs, local aromas, a lot of humor, like in the circus that she bring to the schools, and above all a lot of passion, which has led her to share experiences, information and games about the Andean cat, its environment and its conservation to children and adults in many remote locations.
