

Daniela Ulloa

She was born in La Paz, Bolivia, where she grew up surrounded by snow-capped castles. In her childhood, she experienced the cold wind blowing next to the radiant sun and the sky with its intense sky blue, characteristic of the Andean altitude, which illuminated the daily life of people with brown and white skin, or "chaposas" like her. She studied social communication, is a mother and a nature lover. This trilogy has led her to navigate the currents of education in a boat with the word "freedom" engraved on it. When working with educational processes, she wants to keep alive the innate flame of curiosity, for which she needs to use strategies that nurture the soul, mind and body.

She enjoys learning, which is why she was able to train in the Montessori Method and pursue a Master's Degree in Neuroeducation. She has beautiful experiences working in the classroom, as well as education programs in rural areas, and has a constant desire to learn more.

She deeply values the place where she was born, as well as all its natural and cultural riches. The Andean cat symbolizes all of this, and she loves to take on the challenge of contributing to its conservation through the great teacher: nature.
